PERSONAL PRIVACY EXEMPTIONS: OVERVIEW

On passing the FOIA, Congress observed that federal agencies "have great quantities of files containing intimate details about millions of citizens" the "disclosure of which might harm the individual."

In the 50+ years since, technological advancement has compounded that threat.

More data collected

- Improved ability to analyze data
- Improved ability to disseminate and preserve information

PERSONAL PRIVACY EXEMPTIONS: OVERVIEW

Exemption 6 protects "personnel and medical files and similar files the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

Exemption 7(C) protects "records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes," the disclosure of which "could reasonably be expected to constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy."

PERSONAL PRIVACY EXEMPTIONS: OVERVIEW

- Apply the same analysis for each:
- Step 1. Determine if the threshold issue is satisfied.
- Step 2. Identify a "substantial" privacy interest that will be threatened by disclosure.
- Step 3. Identify a public interest in disclosure.

Step 4. Perform a balancing test to determine which interest is weightier.

STEP I.THRESHOLD EXEMPTION 6

"Personnel and medical files and similar files": Interpreted broadly to include all government records and all information "which can be identified as applying to that individual."

- Essentially, Exemption (b)(6) covers personal privacy interests in virtually any government record.
- Format does not matter. Any hard copy, soft copy, or even audio or video recordings qualify.

STEP I.THRESHOLD EXEMPTION 7(C)

"Records or information compiled for law enforcement purposes":

- Law enforcement purposes include those records compiled to enforce federal, state, or even foreign civil, criminal, or administrative laws.
- Compiled requires only that the records were organized to enforce one of those laws at some point in time. Records created by an agency pursuant to a law enforcement activity or collected or recompiled during the course of a law enforcement activity qualify.

The nature of the records can change, but as long as they were once created or compiled for law enforcement purposes, the exemption may apply.

- The records need not have initially been created for law enforcement purposes.
 If they were created for some other reason, but were later recompiled during the course of a law enforcement activity, they qualify.
- Similarly, if the records were created for a law enforcement purpose and then recompiled for some other purpose, they still qualify for the exemption.

STEP 2. IDENTIFYING THE PRIVACY INTEREST

The privacy interest encompasses an individual's ability to control information concerning his or her person.

- Is there an identifiable individual? The privacy interest belongs to the individual, not the agency. Protection extends to both citizens and foreign nationals.
- What information do you learn about that individual? The type of information covered includes the prosaic (e.g., place of birth and date of marriage) as well as the intimate and potentially embarrassing.

STEP 2. IDENTIFYING THE PRIVACY INTEREST

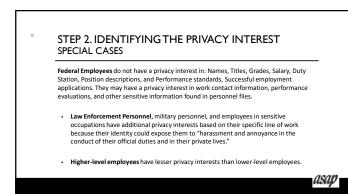

The exemptions only protect a "substantial" privacy interest.

- The exemptions protect only that information in which an individual has an expectation of privacy.
- The threat to privacy must be real rather than speculative. There must be a causal relationship between the threatened disclosure and the privacy interest.
- That threat need not be obvious. If the release of some otherwise harmless information leads to the discovery of private information, there could be a derivative invasion of privacy.

STEP 2. IDENTIFYING EXAMPLES	GTHE PRIVACY INTEREST
• Name	Criminal history
Address (physical / e-mail)	Computer user ID
Phone number	Medical history
Birth date	Financial information
Religious affiliation	Photographs
Social security number	Recordings

STEP 2. IDENTIFYING THE PRIVACY INTEREST SPECIAL CASES

Corporations do not have privacy interests. However, financial information of closely held small businesses could provide insight to the personal finances of its owners.

Deceased Individuals have greatly diminished privacy interests, but their survivors and heirs may have additional privacy interests in information pertaining to the deceased.

Public Figures have a diminished privacy interest, but do not forfeit all privacy rights.

FOIA Requesters do not have any expectation of privacy in the fact that they made a FOIA request, unless the request is about their own records.

	uals do not have a "substantial" privacy interest in information that is already in the public e are a host of exceptions:
	ion may become "practically obscure" if it is difficult to obtain or a significant amount of time has ince its release. The passage of time does not diminish a privacy interest; it may enhance it.
 Individuation dissemination 	Is may have privacy interests in related or additional information being released and ated.
 Accident protection 	al (or even intentional) release of personally identifiable information does not waive future

There is only one potential public interest: Shedding light on the agency's performance of its statutory duties.

Key Issue: What does the public learn about the agency's operations by knowing the individual's private information?

- All requesters must be treated the same. Their personal interest has no bearing on the balancing test, so it does not matter if the requester is looking for information to overturn their criminal conviction or looking to supplement a discovery request in a civil law suit.
- "A release to one is a release to all."

asap

STEP 3. IDENTIFYING THE PUBLIC INTEREST

A requester carries the burden of proving how the disclosure will shed light on the agency's performance of its statutory duties.

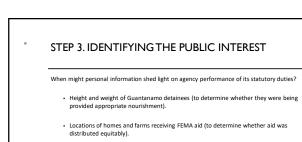

- A requester must show a rational nexus between the requested information and the asserted public interest. The nexus need not be direct; if the information could be used to shed light on the agency's performance, the derivative use could be considered part of the public interest.
- A requester cannot carry its burden without explaining how disclosure serves the public interest.

17	STEP 3. IDENTIFYING THE PUBLIC INTEREST EXEMPTION 7(C) AND ALLEGATIONS OF GOVERNMENT WRONGDOING
	If the asserted public interest is exposing government misconduct, a requester must provide compelling evidence that the agency engaged in wrongdoing.
	 There must be more than a "bare suspicion" of official misconduct – it must "warrant a belief by a reasonable person that the alleged Government impropriety might have occurred." Otherwise, there is no balancing.
	asap

 Political affiliation of investigative agents (to determine if an investigation was politically motivated).

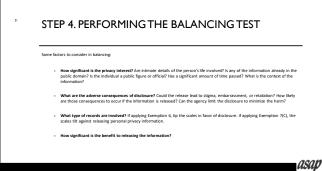

STEP 4. PERFORMING THE BALANCING TEST

To determine whether this information ought to be withheld, an agency must balance the privacy interests involved against the public interest in disclosure.

- If the privacy interest is greater, the material should be redacted.
- If the public interest is greater, it should be released.

asap

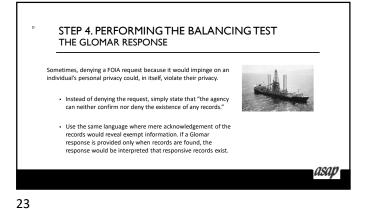

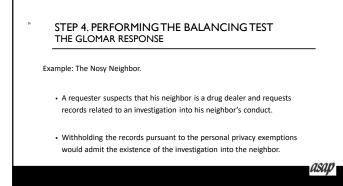

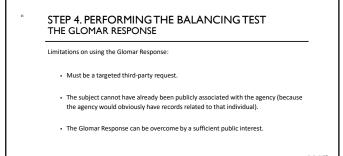

Where information categorically implicates a privacy interest and the requester did not assert a cognizable public interest, the information can be withheld without addressing the individual circumstances of the information, or potentially without even conducting a search.

- Where there is a bright-line rule, apply categorical balancing instead of case-by-case balancing.
- Example: "The mention of an individual's name in a law enforcement file will engender comment and speculation and carries a stigmatizing connotation."
