Does It Make ¢? A 21st Century Discussion on FOIA Fee Assessment

Perhaps the most controversial aspect of processing Freedom of Information Act requests is the fee portion. Assessing, appealing, collecting – it all takes time and money, and in the end, no one is happy.

Fees are a part of the law, but does this still make sense? Information has become available through proactive disclosures, on-line reading rooms/libraries, multi-agency portals and other means. Does assessing fees the old fashioned way have a place in today’s new environment? Come and listen to Jim Hogan of the Department of Defense and Miriam Nisbet of the Office of Government Information Services, NARA discuss this controversy and learn how some agencies and requesters are dealing with fees.
